Quick-Start Guide

How to use a prompt: Copy the text under "The Prompt," replace anything in [BRACKETS] with your own restaurant's details, and paste the whole thing into ChatGPT or Claude. Hit enter and you'll have a usable draft in under two minutes — tweak the wording to match your voice before it goes out the door.

How to find a prompt fast: Press Ctrl+F (Windows) or Cmd+F (Mac) and type what you're trying to do — "bad review," "specials," "schedule" — and jump straight to it. You can also click any entry in the Table of Contents below to jump to that prompt, or use your PDF reader's bookmark sidebar to browse by category. However you search, you're never more than a few seconds from the right prompt.

1. Add context. The more you tell the AI about your restaurant — cuisine, price point, neighborhood, vibe — the less generic the output. Don't skip the placeholders.
2. Iterate, don't settle. If the first draft isn't quite right, reply with "make it more casual," "shorten it," or "give me 3 more options." One follow-up almost always gets you there.
3. Ask for variations. Add "give me 3 versions" to any prompt when you want options to choose from instead of committing to the first draft.

Which AI tools this works with: Every prompt in this pack is written for the free versions of ChatGPT and Claude — no plugins, no code, no API keys required. Just a browser and a copy-paste.

Guest Communication & Reservations (Prompts #1–#8)

Prompt #1 — Email: Reservation Confirmation with a Soft Upsell

- Use this when: A guest just booked online or by phone and you want to confirm the reservation while nudging them toward an add-on, like a tasting menu or wine pairing (booking confirmation).
- The prompt: You are the reservations manager at [RESTAURANT NAME], a [CUISINE TYPE] restaurant. Write a short confirmation email for a guest who just booked a table for [PARTY SIZE] on [DATE/TIME]. Confirm the details clearly, then add one warm, low-pressure line suggesting [UPSELL ITEM, e.g., our chef's tasting menu or the patio seating]. Keep the tone [TONE, e.g., warm and casual / polished and upscale]. End with how to reach us if they need to change anything. Keep it under 120 words.
- Pro tip: Ask for a second version with a subject line under 50 characters — short subject lines get opened more on mobile.

Prompt #2 — Email: Follow-Up on a Private Event or Buyout Inquiry

- Use this when: Someone emailed asking about hosting a birthday dinner, rehearsal dinner, or full restaurant buyout and you need a reply that sounds organized (event inquiry, private party request).
- The prompt: You are the events coordinator at [RESTAURANT NAME]. A guest inquired about hosting a [EVENT TYPE, e.g., 30th birthday dinner] for approximately [GUEST COUNT] people around [DATE/TIMEFRAME]. Write a reply email that thanks them, asks 2-3 clarifying questions you'd actually need answered (budget range, seating vs. buyout, any must-haves), and briefly mentions what makes our space work well for private events. Keep the tone friendly and confident, not salesy. End with a clear next step. Under 150 words.
- Pro tip: Paste in your actual private-dining minimums and ask the AI to fold them in naturally instead of listing them as bullet points.

Prompt #3 — Script: Offering a Waitlist Spot When Fully Booked

- Use this when: A caller wants a reservation time you don't have available and your host needs quick, friendly talking points instead of just saying no (fully booked, no availability, waitlist script).
- The prompt: You are a hospitality trainer writing a phone script for hosts at [RESTAURANT NAME]. Create a short script for when a guest requests a reservation time that's fully booked.

The script should acknowledge the request, offer the closest available alternative time or the waitlist, and mention [WALK-IN POLICY, e.g., we also seat walk-ins at the bar]. Write it as natural spoken dialogue, not a formal script, so it sounds human on the phone. Keep it to 4-5 lines.

- Pro tip: Ask for a second version for text/online chat, since the phone tone doesn't always translate to typed messages.

Prompt #4 — Email: Friendly Re-Engagement After a No-Show

- Use this when: A guest missed their reservation and you want to send a warm, no-guilt-trip note that gets them to book again instead of never coming back (missed reservation, didn't show up).
- The prompt: You are the guest relations manager at [RESTAURANT NAME]. Write a short, genuinely friendly email to a guest who missed their reservation on [DATE]. Do not sound annoyed or passive-aggressive — assume something came up. Let them know we'd love to have them another time, mention [INCENTIVE IF ANY, e.g., a complimentary appetizer on their next visit], and make rebooking easy. Keep it under 100 words and end on a warm note, not a policy reminder.
- Pro tip: If your restaurant charges no-show fees, ask for a second version that mentions the fee gently in one sentence without making the whole email about it.

Prompt #5 — Email: Birthday Outreach for a Regular Guest

- Use this when: A loyal, repeat guest has a birthday coming up per your reservation system or loyalty list and you want a personal-feeling touch (VIP outreach, repeat customer email).
- The prompt: You are writing a personal birthday email from [RESTAURANT NAME] to [GUEST NAME], a regular guest who usually orders [FAVORITE DISH OR ORDER, if known]. Write a short, warm birthday message that feels personal rather than mass-sent, offers [BIRTHDAY PERK, e.g., a free dessert or 10% off], and invites them to book their celebration with us. Keep it under 90 words and avoid generic phrases like "we value your business."
- Pro tip: Feed the AI a few details about the guest's past visits — it makes a noticeable difference in how personal the email feels.

Prompt #6 — Script: Seating Large Groups on a Packed Night

- Use this when: Your host needs quick talking points for moving big parties to their tables efficiently on a busy Friday or Saturday without guests feeling rushed (group seating, busy night).
- The prompt: You are a front-of-house trainer for [RESTAURANT NAME]. Write a short script a host can use when seating a party of [GROUP SIZE] during a packed dinner rush. It should welcome the group, explain the table setup or split-check policy in one sentence if relevant, and set expectations for wait times on food without sounding rushed or scripted. Keep it conversational, under 60 words, and easy to say out loud.
- Pro tip: Swap in your actual split-check or gratuity policy for large parties so the host isn't improvising it live.

Prompt #7 — Email: Catering or Large To-Go Order Confirmation

- Use this when: A guest placed a catering order or a large takeout order and needs a confirmation email with pickup or delivery details (takeout confirmation, catering order receipt).
- The prompt: You are the catering manager at [RESTAURANT NAME]. Write a confirmation email for a catering/to-go order for [ORDER DETAILS, e.g., 2 trays of lasagna, salad for 20] being picked up on [DATE/TIME]. Confirm the order contents, total price of [PRICE], pickup location and any parking notes, and payment status. Add one line reminding them to check the order at pickup. Keep the tone efficient and professional, under 110 words.
- Pro tip: Ask for a version with a "reheating instructions" section added at the bottom — it cuts down on follow-up calls.

Prompt #8 — Response: Answering a Dietary Restriction or Allergy Question

- Use this when: A guest messages or emails asking whether you have gluten-free, vegan, or allergy-friendly options before they book (allergy inquiry, dietary accommodation question, food allergy).
- The prompt: You are a guest services rep at [RESTAURANT NAME], a [CUISINE TYPE] restaurant. A guest asked whether we can accommodate [DIETARY NEED, e.g., a severe nut allergy or vegan diet]. Write a clear, reassuring response that confirms what we can do, mentions [SPECIFIC MENU ITEMS OR KITCHEN PRACTICE, e.g., we have a dedicated fryer], and is honest about any limitations without sounding alarming. Keep it under 100 words and end by inviting them to let their server know when they arrive.

- Pro tip: Never let AI guess at actual allergen handling — always verify claims about cross-contamination with your kitchen before sending.

Reviews & Reputation Management (Prompts #9–#16)

Prompt #9 — Response: Replying to a Negative Review About Food Quality

- Use this when: A guest left a public review complaining their food was cold, bland, or not what they expected and you need a reply that doesn't sound defensive (bad review, food complaint, one-star review).
- The prompt: You are the owner of [RESTAURANT NAME] responding publicly to a [PLATFORM, e.g., Google or Yelp] review. The guest said: "[PASTE REVIEW TEXT]." Write a reply that thanks them for the feedback, acknowledges the specific issue without being defensive or making excuses, briefly notes what we're doing about it, and invites them back with [OFFER IF ANY, e.g., a complimentary dish]. Keep it under 100 words, calm and professional, and avoid sounding scripted or corporate.
- Pro tip: Never argue with details in the review even if you think they're wrong — ask the AI for a version that stays neutral on facts you can't verify.

Prompt #10 — Response: Replying to a Review About Slow or Inattentive Service

- Use this when: A review calls out long wait times, a forgotten order, or a server who seemed checked out and you need a reply that shows you take it seriously (service complaint, slow service review).
- The prompt: You are the general manager of [RESTAURANT NAME] responding to a public review about slow service on a [NIGHT/OCCASION, e.g., busy Saturday night]. The guest said: "[PASTE REVIEW TEXT]." Write a reply that apologizes sincerely without over-explaining, mentions one concrete step we're taking (more staff on weekends, better training, etc.), and invites them to reach out directly at [CONTACT METHOD] to make it right. Keep it under 90 words and human, not corporate.
- Pro tip: Ask for a shorter 40-word version too — some platforms cut off long replies, and a tight reply often reads better anyway.

Prompt #11 — Response: Thanking a Guest for a Glowing Review

- Use this when: Someone left a five-star review raving about their meal and you want a reply worth reposting to social media, not just a generic "thanks!" (positive review, five-star review reply).
- The prompt: You are responding publicly to a five-star review of [RESTAURANT NAME]. The guest wrote: "[PASTE REVIEW TEXT]." Write a warm, specific reply that references at least one detail from their review (the dish, the server, the occasion), thanks them by name, and invites them back to try [NEW ITEM OR EVENT]. Keep it under 70 words, genuine and not overly formal — this needs to sound like a person wrote it, not a template.
- Pro tip: Ask the AI to also write a one-line Instagram Story caption pulling a quote from the review — great reviews make great social content.

Prompt #12 — Script: Handling an In-Person Complaint About a Dish

- Use this when: A guest at the table flags an issue with their food mid-meal and your server needs calm, confident language on the spot (table-side complaint, sending a dish back).
- The prompt: You are a hospitality trainer creating a script for servers at [RESTAURANT NAME]. Write short talking points for when a guest says their dish is [ISSUE, e.g., overcooked or not what they expected]. The script should acknowledge the issue immediately, offer a clear resolution (remake it, comp it, swap it) without needing manager approval for small fixes, and keep the guest's evening from being ruined. Keep it to 3-4 lines of natural spoken dialogue.
- Pro tip: Ask for a second version for when the fix requires manager sign-off, so servers know exactly when to escalate.

Prompt #13 — Email: Responding to a Complaint Sent Directly (Not Public)

- Use this when: A guest emails or DMs you privately about a bad experience instead of posting a public review, and you want to resolve it before it becomes one (private complaint, direct feedback email).
- The prompt: You are the owner of [RESTAURANT NAME] responding to a private email complaint about [ISSUE, e.g., a long wait with no explanation]. The guest wrote: "[PASTE MESSAGE]." Write a personal reply that thanks them for telling you directly instead of posting publicly, takes ownership of the specific problem, and offers [MAKE-GOOD OFFER, e.g., a gift card or their next meal on the house]. Keep it under 130 words and make it sound like it came from a real person who cares.

- Pro tip: Always personalize the opening line yourself before sending — a generic "Dear Guest" undoes the whole point of a private, personal reply.

Prompt #14 — Post: Asking Happy Guests to Leave a Review

- Use this when: You want a simple message (email, receipt footer, or table card) that nudges satisfied guests toward leaving a review without sounding pushy (review request, ask for feedback).
- The prompt: You are writing a short review-request message for [RESTAURANT NAME] to send to guests after a positive visit. Write 3 short variations: one for a post-visit email, one for a receipt footer (under 20 words), and one for a table tent card. Each should thank the guest, make it easy (mention [REVIEW LINK/PLATFORM]), and avoid sounding like a demand. Keep the tone appreciative, not transactional.
- Pro tip: Time the email version to send a few hours after the reservation, not the next day — memory of the meal fades fast.

Prompt #15 — Response: Replying to a Review That Praises a Specific Staff Member

- Use this when: A guest calls out a server, bartender, or host by name in a glowing review and you want a reply that celebrates them (staff shoutout, employee praise review).
- The prompt: You are the manager of [RESTAURANT NAME] responding to a review that specifically praised [STAFF NAME/ROLE, e.g., our server Jake]. The guest wrote: "[PASTE REVIEW TEXT]." Write a reply that thanks the guest, genuinely celebrates the staff member by name, and mentions we'll be sure they see it. Keep it under 60 words and warm — this reply should make the employee feel proud, not just check a box.
- Pro tip: Screenshot the review and the reply together and share it in your staff group chat — recognition like this is a free retention tool.

Prompt #16 — Analysis: Summarizing Recurring Themes Across Recent Reviews

- Use this when: You've got a stack of reviews from the last month and want the patterns pulled out instead of re-reading them one by one (review trends, reputation summary, what guests keep saying).
- The prompt: You are a restaurant consultant analyzing guest reviews for [RESTAURANT NAME]. Here are reviews from the last [TIME PERIOD]: [PASTE REVIEW TEXT OR SUMMARIES]. Identify the 3-5 most common themes (both positive and negative), how often each comes up, and one specific, practical fix for each negative theme. Present it as a table with columns: Theme, Frequency, Positive or Negative, Suggested Fix.

- Pro tip: Run this monthly and keep the tables — after a few months you'll have a clear before/after record of what actually improved.

Marketing & Social Media Content (Prompts #17–#24)

Prompt #17 — Post: Instagram Caption for Today's Special

- Use this when: You need a quick, appetizing caption for a daily or weekly special before the lunch or dinner rush (daily special post, social media caption).
- The prompt: You are the social media manager for [RESTAURANT NAME], a [CUISINE TYPE] restaurant. Write an Instagram caption announcing today's special: [DISH NAME AND SHORT DESCRIPTION]. Make it sound craveable using sensory language (texture, aroma, flavor), keep it under 60 words, include the price of [PRICE], and end with a simple call to action like "today only" or "while it lasts." Suggest 5 relevant hashtags separately.
- Pro tip: Ask for 3 caption variations at once so you can pick the one that best matches today's photo instead of settling for the first draft.

Prompt #18 — Post: "Behind the Scenes" Kitchen Content Idea and Caption

- Use this when: You want to post something other than food photos — a prep video, a staff moment, or a kitchen process — but you're not sure what to say about it (BTS content, kitchen video caption).
- The prompt: You are a social media strategist for [RESTAURANT NAME]. Suggest 3 quick "behind the scenes" content ideas we could film in under a minute during a normal shift (things like prepping [SIGNATURE INGREDIENT] or plating [SIGNATURE DISH]), then write a short caption for the strongest idea. The caption should feel personal and unpolished, not like an ad, and end with a light question to invite comments. Keep it under 50 words.
- Pro tip: Film these on a phone in vertical video — polished footage actually performs worse for "behind the scenes" content than a raw, real clip.

Prompt #19 — Email: Monthly Newsletter to Our Subscriber List

- Use this when: It's time to send the monthly update to your email list and you don't want to start from a blank page (email newsletter, monthly update to guests).
- The prompt: You are writing the monthly email newsletter for [RESTAURANT NAME]. This month's highlights are: [LIST 2-4 THINGS, e.g., new fall menu, live music Fridays, a charity night]. Write a newsletter with a short, friendly intro paragraph, a scannable section for each highlight with one sentence each, and a closing line that invites people to book a table. Keep the whole thing under 200 words and write a subject line under 45 characters.
- Pro tip: Ask for 3 subject line options and test different ones each month — open rates can swing a lot based on subject line alone.

Prompt #20 — Post: Announcing a New Menu Item

- Use this when: You're adding a new dish or drink to the menu and need launch posts for Instagram, Facebook, and a short text blast (new menu item announcement, menu launch post).
- The prompt: You are announcing a new menu item at [RESTAURANT NAME]: [DISH NAME AND KEY INGREDIENTS/INSPIRATION]. Write three versions of the announcement: an Instagram caption (under 60 words, sensory and exciting), a Facebook post (slightly longer, can include the backstory of the dish), and a one-line text message blast for our SMS list. Keep the tone [TONE, e.g., playful and fun / elevated and refined] across all three.
- Pro tip: Ask the AI to also draft a "why we made this dish" mini-story — origin stories consistently get more engagement than plain announcements.

Prompt #21 — Post: Seasonal or Holiday Promotion Announcement

- Use this when: You're running a special for a holiday or season (Valentine's Day, Mother's Day, football season, first day of patio weather) and need to announce it (holiday promo, seasonal special post).
- The prompt: You are promoting a [HOLIDAY/SEASON, e.g., Valentine's Day] special at [RESTAURANT NAME]: [DETAILS OF THE OFFER, e.g., a 4-course prix fixe menu for $65 per person]. Write a social post announcing the promotion that creates gentle urgency (limited seating, reservations filling up), clearly states the price and what's included, and includes a call to action to book. Keep it under 80 words and avoid sounding like a coupon flyer.
- Pro tip: Post this 2-3 weeks before the holiday and again 3 days before — most bookings come in that final push.

Prompt #22 — Plan: One Week of Content From a Single Dish

- Use this when: You're low on content ideas and want to stretch one dish or ingredient into a full week of posts without repeating yourself (content calendar, week of social posts).
- The prompt: You are a social media strategist for [RESTAURANT NAME]. Take one dish, [DISH NAME], and turn it into 5 different pieces of content for one week — each with a different angle (the ingredients, the plating process, a guest reaction, a pairing suggestion, a "did you know" fact about the dish). For each, give a one-line content idea and a short caption. Present it as a table with columns: Day, Content Idea, Caption.
- Pro tip: Batch-shoot the photos and videos for all 5 posts in one prep session — it's the fastest way to actually stick to the calendar.

Prompt #23 — Post: Reposting a Guest Photo or Review as Content

- Use this when: A guest tagged you in a great photo or left a glowing comment and you want to repost it with a caption that gives them credit (user-generated content, repost guest photo).
- The prompt: You are writing a repost caption for [RESTAURANT NAME]. A guest, [GUEST HANDLE OR NAME], posted a photo of [WHAT'S IN THE PHOTO, e.g., our brunch spread] with the caption: "[PASTE THEIR CAPTION OR COMMENT]." Write a repost caption that thanks them by tag, adds a bit of our own voice or a light joke, and includes a call to action to visit or order the same dish. Keep it under 50 words.
- Pro tip: Always ask the guest for permission to repost before you do, even if they tagged you — a quick DM takes ten seconds and avoids awkwardness.

Prompt #24 — Post: Tying a Post to a Local Event

- Use this when: There's a local event happening nearby (a festival, game day, farmers market, concert) and you want a post that connects your restaurant to it without forcing it (local event tie-in, game day post).
- The prompt: You are writing a social post for [RESTAURANT NAME] tying us to [LOCAL EVENT, e.g., the town's fall festival or a home game for the local team] happening on [DATE]. Write a caption that naturally connects the event to something we're offering (a special, extended hours, a watch party) without feeling like a stretch. Keep it under 60 words and match the excitement of the event itself.
- Pro tip: Mention the event by its actual name and hashtag if it has one — it puts your post in front of people actively searching for event info.

Menu Development & Food Descriptions (Prompts #25–#32)

Prompt #25 — Description: Appetizing Copy for a New Menu Item

- Use this when: You're adding a dish to the printed or online menu and need copy that sells it without sounding like a cookbook ingredient list (menu description, dish copy).
- The prompt: You are a menu copywriter for [RESTAURANT NAME]. Write a menu description for [DISH NAME], made with [KEY INGREDIENTS]. The description should be 15-25 words, use one or two vivid sensory words (not five), highlight what makes it different from a version a guest could get elsewhere, and match a [TONE, e.g., upscale / homestyle / playful] voice. Avoid overused words like "delicious," "amazing," or "mouthwatering."
- Pro tip: Ask for 3 versions at different lengths (short, medium, one-sentence) so you have options for the printed menu, the online ordering site, and social captions.

Prompt #26 — Analysis: Which Menu Items to Promote or Cut

- Use this when: You want a clear-eyed look at which dishes are pulling their weight and which are quietly costing you money, based on cost and popularity (menu engineering, menu analysis, what to 86 permanently).
- The prompt: You are a menu engineering consultant. Here is data for menu items at [RESTAURANT NAME]: [PASTE A LIST WITH ITEM NAME, FOOD COST, PRICE, AND MONTHLY UNITS SOLD]. Categorize each item as a Star (high profit, high popularity), Plow Horse (low profit, high popularity), Puzzle (high profit, low popularity), or Dog (low profit, low popularity). Present as a table, then give one specific recommendation per category (reprice, reposition on menu, promote, or cut).
- Pro tip: Re-run this every quarter with fresh sales numbers — menu engineering is only useful when it reflects what's actually selling right now, not last year.

Prompt #27 — Plan: Seasonal Menu Refresh Ideas

- Use this when: It's time to update the menu for a new season and you want a starting point built around what's actually in season, not a random brainstorm (seasonal menu, menu refresh).
- The prompt: You are a chef consultant helping [RESTAURANT NAME], a [CUISINE TYPE] restaurant, refresh its menu for [SEASON]. Our current menu style is [BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF STYLE]. Suggest 5 dish concepts using ingredients that are in season during [SEASON] in [REGION], noting which existing dish each could replace or complement. For each, give a one-line concept description. Present as a table with columns: Dish Concept, Key Seasonal Ingredients, Replaces/Complements.

- Pro tip: Hand the final list to your chef for a gut-check on kitchen labor and equipment before committing — AI can suggest concepts, but it can't see your line.

Prompt #28 — Description: Wine or Drink Pairing Suggestions

- Use this when: You want pairing suggestions to print on the menu or train servers on, without guessing off the top of your head (wine pairing, drink pairing suggestions).
- The prompt: You are a beverage consultant for [RESTAURANT NAME]. Suggest 3 drink pairings for [DISH NAME, WITH KEY FLAVORS/PREPARATION] from our current beverage list: [PASTE A FEW WINE/COCKTAIL/BEER OPTIONS]. For each pairing, give a one-sentence explanation of why it works (acidity, weight, contrast, etc.) that a server could repeat to a guest without sounding like a sommelier script. Keep each explanation under 20 words.
- Pro tip: Ask for the same pairings written as a 5-second server soundbite — servers are far more likely to actually recommend pairings when the explanation is short enough to remember.

Prompt #29 — Description: Kids Menu Item Names and Descriptions

- Use this when: You're building or refreshing a kids menu and want names and descriptions that appeal to both kids and the parents paying the bill (kids menu, children's menu copy).
- The prompt: You are writing a kids menu for [RESTAURANT NAME]. Here are the dishes: [LIST DISHES, e.g., mini cheese quesadilla, chicken tenders, mac and cheese]. Write a fun, simple name and a one-line description for each that would appeal to kids ages [AGE RANGE], while reassuring parents about portion size or ingredients where relevant. Keep descriptions under 10 words each. Present as a table with columns: Dish, Kid-Friendly Name, Description.
- Pro tip: Read the names out loud before finalizing — the best kids menu names are fun to say, not just fun to read.

Prompt #30 — Plan: Limited-Time Offer Concept Ideas

- Use this when: You want to run a limited-time item or promotion to create buzz but need a few solid concepts to choose from instead of picking randomly (LTO ideas, limited-time menu item).

- The prompt: You are a menu strategist for [RESTAURANT NAME]. We want to run a limited-time offer during [TIMEFRAME, e.g., the next 3 weeks] to drive traffic on [SLOW DAY/SHIFT, if applicable]. Our kitchen is strong at [STRENGTHS, e.g., grilling, baking, house-made sauces]. Suggest 3 LTO concepts that use ingredients we likely already stock, explain the hook for each (what makes it shareable or urgent), and estimate relative kitchen complexity as Low, Medium, or High.
- Pro tip: Pick the Low-complexity option for your first LTO — a smooth first run builds staff buy-in for bigger ones later.

Prompt #31 — Description: Dessert Menu Copy

- Use this when: You're writing or updating dessert descriptions and want language that makes people order dessert even when they're full (dessert menu, dessert descriptions).
- The prompt: You are a menu copywriter for [RESTAURANT NAME]. Write descriptions for these desserts: [LIST DESSERTS WITH KEY COMPONENTS]. Each description should be 12-20 words, emphasize texture and temperature contrast (warm/cold, crisp/soft) where it applies, and avoid the word "decadent." Match a [TONE, e.g., playful / elegant] voice consistent with the rest of the menu.
- Pro tip: Ask servers which dessert they find easiest to sell and hardest to sell, then have the AI punch up the description for the hard sell first.

Prompt #32 — Checklist: Menu Quality Check Before It Goes to Print

- Use this when: You're about to send a new menu to the printer or update the online ordering platform and want one last pass to catch pricing, allergen, and consistency mistakes (menu proofread, pre-print checklist).
- The prompt: You are a meticulous menu editor. Create a pre-print quality checklist for [RESTAURANT NAME]'s menu covering: pricing consistency across sections, allergen and dietary labeling completeness, spelling of ingredient and dish names, consistent formatting (capitalization, punctuation, description length), and matching item names to POS system names. Present it as a checklist with 8-10 items a manager can physically check off before approving the final print.
- Pro tip: Print the checklist out and have a second person do the actual check — a fresh set of eyes catches typos AI and the original writer both miss.

Advertising Copy & Promotions (Prompts #33–#40)

A quick compliance note: always make sure any claims in your ads (about ingredients, awards, "best in town," health claims, etc.) are actually true and something you can back up. Truth-in-advertising rules apply to small restaurants too — double-check anything factual before it goes live.

Prompt #33 — Ad: Facebook/Instagram Ad Copy for a Promotion

- Use this when: You're running a paid social ad for a promotion and need copy built for a scroll-stopping first line, not a regular post caption (Facebook ad, Instagram ad copy).
- The prompt: You are a paid social copywriter for [RESTAURANT NAME]. Write Facebook/Instagram ad copy for this promotion: [PROMOTION DETAILS, e.g., $10 off any entree, valid this week only]. Give me a hook line under 10 words designed to stop a scroll, a body of 2-3 short sentences building interest, and a clear call to action with urgency. Also suggest 2 headline variations under 40 characters for the ad's headline field.
- Pro tip: Make sure every claim in the ad is something you can actually deliver on — "today only" only works if it's actually today only.

Prompt #34 — Ad: Google Search Ad Headlines and Descriptions

- Use this when: You're setting up a Google Ads campaign and need multiple headline and description options to fill in the character-limited fields (Google Ads, search ad copy).
- The prompt: You are writing Google Search Ads for [RESTAURANT NAME], located in [NEIGHBORHOOD/CITY], known for [CUISINE TYPE OR SPECIALTY]. Write 5 headlines (30 characters max each) and 3 descriptions (90 characters max each) targeting people searching for "[SEARCH TERM, e.g., best Italian restaurant near me]." Make each headline distinct so they can be rotated and tested against each other.
- Pro tip: Pull your actual highest-rated dish or feature into at least one headline — specific beats generic in search ads every time.

Prompt #35 — Post: Happy Hour Promotion Announcement

- Use this when: You're launching or refreshing a happy hour and need a post that clearly states the deal without burying it in fluff (happy hour ad, drink specials post).
- The prompt: You are promoting happy hour at [RESTAURANT NAME]. The details are: [DAYS/TIMES AND SPECIALS, e.g., Mon-Thu 4-6pm, $2 off drafts, half-price apps]. Write a social post that leads with the specific deal in the first line (not a vague teaser), lists what's included clearly, and ends with the days/times restated for anyone skimming. Keep it under 70 words.

- Pro tip: Pin this post to the top of your Instagram and Facebook pages and refresh the wording every month so it doesn't look stale to repeat visitors.

Prompt #36 — Ad: Grand Opening or Re-Opening Announcement

- Use this when: You're opening a new location or re-opening after a closure/renovation and need announcement copy across channels (grand opening ad, re-opening announcement).
- The prompt: You are announcing the [GRAND OPENING/RE-OPENING] of [RESTAURANT NAME] at [LOCATION] on [DATE]. Write three versions: a social media post building excitement with a countdown feel, a short local press release opener (2-3 sentences a local paper or blog could use), and a text blast for our subscriber list. Mention [OPENING SPECIAL/EVENT IF ANY]. Keep the tone genuinely excited, not corporate.
- Pro tip: Ask for a version of the press release opener addressed "For Immediate Release" with a placeholder for a media contact — it saves a step if you plan to pitch local outlets.

Prompt #37 — Post: Loyalty Program Sign-Up Promotion

- Use this when: You want to grow sign-ups for your loyalty or rewards program and need copy that explains the value fast (loyalty program promo, rewards signup).
- The prompt: You are promoting the [LOYALTY PROGRAM NAME] at [RESTAURANT NAME]. The program works like this: [HOW IT WORKS, e.g., earn 1 point per dollar, 100 points = $10 off]. Write a short social post and a table-tent card version that explain the value in one sentence, make signing up sound effortless (mention how, e.g., scan a QR code), and give one reason to join today instead of "eventually." Keep each version under 50 words.
- Pro tip: Ask for a version that leads with a specific dollar example ("spend $200 over time, get $20 back") — concrete numbers convert better than "earn rewards."

Prompt #38 — Ad: Delivery App Promo Description

- Use this when: You're setting up a promoted item or store description on DoorDash, Uber Eats, or Grubhub and want copy tuned for a delivery audience, not dine-in guests (delivery app description, DoorDash promo).
- The prompt: You are writing store and promo copy for [RESTAURANT NAME] on delivery apps like DoorDash and Uber Eats. Write a short restaurant bio (2 sentences, focused on what makes us worth ordering from when there are 20 other options on the app) and a promo blurb for [SPECIFIC DEAL, e.g., free delivery on orders over $25]. Keep both tight — delivery app users skim fast and decide in seconds.

- Pro tip: Lead with your single best-selling, most photogenic dish by name — delivery app browsers decide based on cravings, not restaurant history.

Prompt #39 — Ad: 30-Second Local Radio or Print Ad Script

- Use this when: You've got local radio or print ad space and need a tight script that hits the key points in a short read (radio ad script, local print ad).
- The prompt: You are writing a 30-second local radio ad script for [RESTAURANT NAME], a [CUISINE TYPE] restaurant in [LOCATION]. Highlight [1-2 KEY SELLING POINTS, e.g., our patio and live music] and include [CALL TO ACTION, e.g., our address and a website]. Write it to be read aloud in roughly 75-80 words at a natural conversational pace, with a warm, inviting tone — not a fast-talking hard sell.
- Pro tip: Read the script out loud and time it yourself before recording — AI word counts don't always match real speaking pace.

Prompt #40 — Ad: Win-Back Offer for Guests Who Haven't Returned

- Use this when: You want to re-engage guests who used to visit regularly but haven't been back in a while, via email or a retargeting ad (win-back campaign, lapsed customer offer).
- The prompt: You are writing a win-back message for [RESTAURANT NAME] targeting guests who haven't visited in [TIMEFRAME, e.g., 90 days]. Write an email and a short retargeting ad version that acknowledges it's been a while without guilt-tripping, reminds them what they're missing (a specific dish or experience), and offers [INCENTIVE, e.g., 15% off their next visit]. Keep the email under 100 words and the ad under 30 words.
- Pro tip: Set an actual expiration date on the incentive — an open-ended offer creates zero urgency to act now.

Staff Management, Training & SOPs (Prompts #41–#48)

Prompt #41 — SOP: Opening or Closing Checklist

- Use this when: You want a clear, written step-by-step checklist for opening or closing shifts so nothing gets skipped when a new or rushed employee is running it (opening checklist, closing procedures, side work list).
- The prompt: You are an operations manager writing a [OPENING/CLOSING] checklist for the [FRONT OF HOUSE/BACK OF HOUSE] at [RESTAURANT NAME]. Include tasks in the order they should be done, covering [KEY AREAS, e.g., line setup, POS system, cleaning, cash drawer]. Write it as a numbered checklist of 10-15 items, each specific enough that a new employee could follow it without asking questions. Note which items require manager sign-off.
- Pro tip: Laminate the final checklist and post it at the relevant station — a checklist that lives only in a binder in the office never gets used.

Prompt #42 — Job Posting: Hiring Ad for an Open Role

- Use this when: You need to post a job opening and want it to actually stand out from generic "now hiring" listings (hiring ad, job posting, help wanted ad).
- The prompt: You are writing a job posting for a [ROLE, e.g., line cook, server, bartender] at [RESTAURANT NAME], a [CUISINE TYPE] restaurant in [LOCATION]. Include what makes working here different (culture, growth opportunity, tips, schedule flexibility — whatever is actually true), the core responsibilities in plain language, and what we're looking for in a candidate. Keep it under 180 words, friendly and specific, and end with how to apply.
- Pro tip: Mention the actual pay range or tip average if you're comfortable sharing it — job posts with pay transparency consistently get more qualified applicants.

Prompt #43 — Script: Welcome Message for a New Hire

- Use this when: Someone just accepted a job offer and you want a warm welcome message before their first day that sets the tone (new hire welcome, first day message).
- The prompt: You are the manager at [RESTAURANT NAME] writing a welcome message for [NEW HIRE NAME], who just accepted the [ROLE] position. Write a short, genuinely warm message confirming their start date of [DATE], what to bring/wear on day one, who to ask for when they arrive, and one sentence about what excites you about them joining the team. Keep it under 100 words and personal, not like a corporate HR template.

- Pro tip: Send this the same day they accept the offer — the sooner a new hire feels welcomed, the less likely they are to ghost before day one.

Prompt #44 — Training: New Server Menu Knowledge Outline

- Use this when: You're training a new server and want a structured way to teach the menu instead of just handing them a copy and saying "memorize it" (server training, menu knowledge training).
- The prompt: You are a training manager at [RESTAURANT NAME]. Our menu includes these sections: [LIST MENU SECTIONS, e.g., starters, entrees, desserts, bar]. Create a 3-day training outline for a new server to learn the menu, with each day focused on a specific goal (day 1: sections and top sellers, day 2: allergens and modifications, day 3: pairing and upselling). For each day, list 3-4 specific things they should be able to do by the end.
- Pro tip: Turn each day into a short quiz you give verbally at the end of the shift — active recall sticks far better than passive reading.

Prompt #45 — Response: Shift Swap Request Policy Explanation

- Use this when: A staff member asks to swap a shift last-minute and you want a consistent, fair way to respond that you can reuse every time (shift swap, schedule change request).
- The prompt: You are a shift manager at [RESTAURANT NAME] responding to a staff member's request to swap their shift on [DATE]. Our policy is: [PASTE YOUR ACTUAL POLICY, e.g., swaps need a same-role replacement approved 24 hours in advance]. Write a short, friendly text or message response that explains what they need to do next, without sounding like a rulebook. Keep it under 50 words.
- Pro tip: Ask for a second version for when the request breaks policy (too last-minute, no replacement) so you have a firm-but-kind way to say no ready to go.

Prompt #46 — Script: Giving Constructive Feedback to an Underperforming Team Member

- Use this when: You need to have a one-on-one conversation about performance (missed side work, attitude, speed) and want to prep talking points that are direct but not harsh (performance conversation, coaching a staff member).
- The prompt: You are a restaurant manager preparing for a one-on-one conversation with a team member about [SPECIFIC ISSUE, e.g., consistently missing closing side work]. Write 4-5 talking points that open with something genuine and positive about them, state the specific issue factually without generalizing ("always" or "never"), explain the impact on the team, and end with a clear, achievable expectation going forward. Keep the tone direct but respectful.

- Pro tip: Practice saying the talking points out loud once before the conversation — reading feedback and delivering it calmly in person are two different skills.

Prompt #47 — Announcement: Pre-Shift Meeting Talking Points

- Use this when: You run quick pre-shift meetings ("family meal" or "lineup") and want a fast way to organize what needs covering before service starts (pre-shift meeting, lineup notes, staff huddle).
- The prompt: You are a manager prepping for today's pre-shift meeting at [RESTAURANT NAME]. Today's key points are: [LIST 3-5 THINGS, e.g., 86'd items, a VIP reservation, a new special, a reminder about upselling dessert]. Turn this into a tight 90-second talking script a manager could read almost verbatim, ordered from most to least urgent, ending on an energizing note before service.
- Pro tip: Keep a running doc of these and reuse the format daily — writing it fresh from scratch each time is the part that eats up managers' mornings.

Prompt #48 — Policy: Staff Handbook Section

- Use this when: You're building or updating your staff handbook and need a clearly written policy section on a specific topic (handbook policy, staff rules section).
- The prompt: You are writing a section of the staff handbook for [RESTAURANT NAME] covering our policy on [TOPIC, e.g., dress code, tardiness, cell phone use during shifts]. Our actual policy is: [DESCRIBE YOUR POLICY IN PLAIN LANGUAGE]. Turn this into a clearly written handbook section with a short intro sentence, the specific rules as a bulleted list, and the consequence for not following it. Keep the tone firm but respectful, not punitive.
- Pro tip: Have a labor attorney or HR advisor review any handbook language involving discipline or termination before you finalize it — AI drafts wording, it doesn't know your local labor law.

Operations, Vendors & Admin (Prompts #49–#56)

Prompt #49 — Email: Negotiating Better Pricing with a Food Vendor

- Use this when: Your food costs are creeping up and you want to approach a supplier about pricing without burning the relationship (vendor negotiation, supplier pricing email).
- The prompt: You are the owner of [RESTAURANT NAME] writing to [VENDOR NAME], our supplier for [PRODUCT CATEGORY, e.g., produce or proteins]. We've been ordering [ORDER VOLUME/FREQUENCY] for [LENGTH OF RELATIONSHIP], and recent pricing on [SPECIFIC ITEM(S)] has increased. Write an email that acknowledges the relationship, asks directly about options (volume discount, locking in a rate, alternative products), and stays collaborative rather than confrontational. Keep it under 130 words.
- Pro tip: Ask for a version that mentions a competing quote you've received — even referencing it generally often opens up flexibility a vendor wouldn't offer otherwise.

Prompt #50 — Email: Following Up on a Late or Incorrect Delivery

- Use this when: A vendor delivery showed up late, short, or with the wrong items and you need a clear, professional email documenting it (delivery issue, wrong order from supplier, late shipment).
- The prompt: You are writing to [VENDOR NAME] about a delivery issue on [DATE]. The order was supposed to include [WHAT WAS ORDERED] but instead [WHAT WENT WRONG, e.g., arrived 3 hours late / was missing 2 cases]. Write a firm but professional email that states the facts clearly, explains the operational impact (a specific example, like having to 86 a dish), and asks for a specific resolution (credit, redelivery, or both) by [TIMEFRAME].
- Pro tip: Attach a photo of the short or incorrect delivery if you have one — vendors resolve documented issues faster than verbal-only complaints.

Prompt #51 — Checklist: Setting Up an Inventory Count Sheet

- Use this when: You're building or cleaning up your par-level and inventory count process and want a structured starting sheet (inventory sheet, par level list, stock count template).
- The prompt: You are a back-of-house operations consultant. Help [RESTAURANT NAME] build an inventory count sheet for [CATEGORY, e.g., dry goods, walk-in cooler, bar]. List the item categories we should be tracking based on a typical [CUISINE TYPE] kitchen, and for each, note the unit of measure to count in (case, lb, bottle) and a placeholder column for par level. Present it as a table with columns: Item Category, Unit of Measure, Par Level (fill in), Current Count (fill in).

- Pro tip: Fill in your real par levels once, save the sheet as a template, and reuse it weekly — the AI's job is building the structure, not guessing your actual numbers.

Prompt #52 — Email: Requesting Quotes From a New Potential Supplier

- Use this when: You're shopping around for a new vendor (produce, linens, cleaning supplies) and need a clear request-for-quote email (RFQ email, new vendor inquiry).
- The prompt: You are the owner of [RESTAURANT NAME] reaching out to [POTENTIAL VENDOR NAME] for the first time about [PRODUCT/SERVICE CATEGORY]. Write an email introducing our restaurant briefly, stating our approximate order volume or frequency of [FREQUENCY], and asking for pricing, minimum order requirements, and delivery schedule. Keep it under 120 words and professional — this is a first impression email.
- Pro tip: Ask 2-3 vendors the exact same questions using this template so the quotes actually come back in a format you can compare apples to apples.

Prompt #53 — SOP: Handling an Equipment Breakdown Emergency

- Use this when: A walk-in cooler, fryer, or other critical piece of equipment goes down mid-shift and staff need clear steps instead of scrambling (equipment failure, walk-in breakdown, emergency SOP).
- The prompt: You are an operations manager writing an emergency SOP for [RESTAURANT NAME] covering what to do if [EQUIPMENT, e.g., the walk-in cooler] breaks down during service. Include the immediate first steps (who to notify, what to do with food safety), who to call for repair ([REPAIR CONTACT INFO PLACEHOLDER]), and how to communicate the impact to the kitchen and front of house. Write it as a numbered step-by-step list of no more than 8 steps.
- Pro tip: Print this and tape it inside the office door or near the equipment itself — in an actual emergency, nobody is searching a shared drive for the right document.

Prompt #54 — Plan: Weekly Staff Scheduling Approach

- Use this when: You're building next week's schedule and want a structured way to think through coverage instead of just filling slots from memory (staff schedule, weekly scheduling plan).

- The prompt: You are a scheduling consultant for [RESTAURANT NAME]. Our typical weekly volume pattern is: [DESCRIBE, e.g., slow Mon-Tue, moderate Wed-Thu, packed Fri-Sun]. We have [NUMBER] staff across [ROLES, e.g., servers, cooks, hosts]. Give me a framework for how to allocate more staff to peak shifts without overstaffing slow ones, including how many people per role I'd realistically need on a slow night versus a peak night. Present it as a simple table by day and role.
- Pro tip: Feed in last month's actual sales-per-hour data if you have it — the more real numbers you give the AI, the less generic the staffing suggestions will be.

Prompt #55 — Email: Notifying Guests of a Temporary Closure

- Use this when: You need to let guests know about a closure for renovation, weather, a private buyout, or a holiday, and want to avoid a wall of cancellations (temporary closure notice, closed for renovation announcement).
- The prompt: You are writing an announcement for [RESTAURANT NAME] about being closed [DATES] due to [REASON, e.g., kitchen renovation, a private event, severe weather]. Write a short email and matching social post that clearly states the closure dates, briefly explains why in a positive light if appropriate, and tells guests what to do if they have an existing reservation. Keep both under 90 words and reassuring, not alarming.
- Pro tip: Post the social version to your Google Business Profile too, not just Instagram — that's often the first place people check before showing up.

Prompt #56 — Checklist: Health Inspection Prep

- Use this when: You know a health inspection is coming (or want to always be ready for a surprise one) and want a walkthrough checklist covering the areas inspectors actually check (health inspection prep, food safety walkthrough).
- The prompt: You are a food safety consultant preparing [RESTAURANT NAME] for a routine health inspection. Create a pre-inspection walkthrough checklist covering the major areas inspectors typically review: food storage temperatures, handwashing stations, date labeling, pest control signs, cleanliness of prep surfaces, and employee food safety practices. Present it as a checklist of 12-15 specific, actionable items a manager could walk through in 30 minutes.
- Pro tip: Treat this as a weekly self-check, not a once-a-year scramble — restaurants that pass easily are usually the ones that never let it slide in between visits.

Financial Tasks: Pricing, Costing & Reporting (Prompts #57–#64)

A quick note: AI is great for organizing numbers and spotting patterns, but it can't see your actual books. Always double-check calculations and run anything that affects pricing, payroll, or taxes past your bookkeeper or accountant before acting on it.

Prompt #57 — Analysis: Calculating Food Cost % and Setting a Menu Price

- Use this when: You're pricing a new dish and want to make sure the price actually hits your target food cost percentage instead of guessing (food cost calculation, menu pricing).
- The prompt: You are a restaurant cost accountant. Help me price [DISH NAME]. The ingredients and costs per portion are: [LIST INGREDIENTS WITH COSTS]. Our target food cost percentage is [TARGET %, e.g., 28%]. Calculate the total plate cost, then show me the menu price needed to hit that target percentage, plus what the actual food cost percentage would be at two nearby price points (one slightly lower, one slightly higher) so I can see the tradeoff. Present it as a simple table.
- Pro tip: Round the final price to match your menu's existing pricing pattern (like always ending in .95 or .00) — a technically correct price that looks out of place hurts more than it helps.

Prompt #58 — Report: Weekly Sales Summary for Owner or Investors

- Use this when: You need to turn raw weekly sales numbers into a short, readable summary for an owner, partner, or investor instead of just forwarding a spreadsheet (weekly sales report, owner update).
- The prompt: You are a restaurant financial analyst. Here is this week's sales data for [RESTAURANT NAME]: [PASTE NUMBERS: total sales, comparison to last week or last year, top-selling items, any notable events]. Write a short summary covering total sales performance, the standout positive, one area of concern if the data shows one, and a one-sentence outlook for next week. Keep it under 150 words and written for someone who doesn't want to dig through the numbers themselves.
- Pro tip: Keep these summaries in one running document — after a few months, you'll be able to ask the AI to compare trends across the whole stretch instead of just week to week.

Prompt #59 — Analysis: Checking Labor Cost Percentage Against Target

- Use this when: You want to see whether your labor spend is in a healthy range compared to sales, and get specific ideas if it's running hot (labor cost percentage, overstaffing analysis).
- The prompt: You are a restaurant operations consultant. Our total labor cost last [PERIOD, e.g., week or month] was [LABOR COST $] against total sales of [SALES $]. Our target labor cost percentage is [TARGET %, e.g., 30%]. Calculate our actual labor cost percentage, tell me how far off target we are in dollars, and suggest 3 specific, realistic ways to close the gap without cutting service quality (schedule adjustments, cross-training, shift length changes).
- Pro tip: Break this out by shift (lunch vs. dinner, weekday vs. weekend) if you have the data — restaurant labor problems are almost always concentrated in a few specific shifts, not spread evenly.

Prompt #60 — Email/Post: Explaining a Price Increase to Staff or Guests

- Use this when: You need to raise menu prices and want to communicate it honestly to your team or your regulars without it feeling like an apology or a confession (price increase announcement, explaining higher prices).
- The prompt: You are the owner of [RESTAURANT NAME] communicating a menu price increase of [AMOUNT/PERCENTAGE] effective [DATE], driven by [REASON, e.g., rising ingredient and labor costs]. Write two versions: a short, honest note to staff so they can speak confidently if guests ask, and a brief, low-key social post for guests that doesn't over-apologize or dwell on it. Keep both under 90 words and confident in tone, not defensive.
- Pro tip: Brief your servers on this before it goes public — nothing undermines a confident price-increase message like a server who seems caught off guard when a guest mentions it.

Prompt #61 — Analysis: Break-Even Analysis for a New Item or Expansion

- Use this when: You're considering adding a new piece of equipment, a patio expansion, or a new service (like brunch) and want to know roughly how much extra revenue it needs to pay for itself (break-even analysis, ROI on new equipment or service).
- The prompt: You are a small business financial analyst. We are considering [INVESTMENT, e.g., adding a patio with 20 seats, or launching a weekend brunch service]. The estimated upfront and ongoing costs are: [LIST COSTS]. The expected additional revenue per [DAY/WEEK/MONTH] is roughly [ESTIMATE]. Calculate approximately how long it would take to break even, and note 2 assumptions in this estimate that are worth double-checking before committing.

- Pro tip: Run this with a conservative revenue estimate and an optimistic one side by side — knowing your break-even range under both scenarios is far more useful than one single number.

Prompt #62 — Report: Monthly P&L Summary in Plain Language

- Use this when: You have a profit and loss statement from your bookkeeper or POS system and want it translated into plain language you can actually explain to a partner or lender (P&L summary, monthly financial recap).
- The prompt: You are a financial translator for small business owners. Here is our profit and loss summary for [MONTH]: [PASTE KEY NUMBERS: revenue, COGS, labor, rent, other expenses, net profit/loss]. Explain in plain English how the month went, which expense category grew the most compared to typical restaurant benchmarks, and one question I should ask my bookkeeper based on this data. Keep it under 150 words and avoid accounting jargon.
- Pro tip: Always verify any benchmark percentages the AI references against your specific market and restaurant type — a fine-dining benchmark and a fast-casual benchmark can look very different.

Prompt #63 — Plan: Budgeting for a Slow Season

- Use this when: You know a slow season is coming (post-holiday January, a summer lull, a slow month for your specific concept) and want to plan for it instead of reacting to it (slow season budget, seasonal cash flow planning).
- The prompt: You are a small business financial planner. [RESTAURANT NAME] historically sees a [PERCENTAGE, e.g., 20%] drop in sales during [SLOW PERIOD, e.g., January and February]. Our typical monthly expenses are: [LIST KEY EXPENSE CATEGORIES AND AMOUNTS]. Suggest a practical budgeting approach for this slow period, including which costs are safest to trim temporarily and which should stay fixed to protect quality and staff retention. Present it as a table: Expense Category, Recommendation, Why.
- Pro tip: Start this planning process at least 6-8 weeks before the slow season hits — reactive cost-cutting during the slump itself almost always damages guest experience.

Prompt #64 — Analysis: Preparing to Negotiate a Lease Renewal

- Use this when: Your lease is coming up for renewal and you want to walk into the conversation with the landlord prepared instead of just accepting the new number (lease renewal, rent negotiation prep).
- The prompt: You are a small business advisor helping [RESTAURANT NAME] prepare to negotiate a lease renewal. Our current rent is [CURRENT RENT], the landlord has proposed [PROPOSED NEW RENT], and our lease is up on [DATE]. Our sales have [TRENDED UP/DOWN/STAYED FLAT] over the lease term. Help me build 3 talking points for the negotiation (using our track record, market comparisons, or a longer lease term as leverage), and one fallback ask if they won't move on the rent itself (build-out credit, longer free-rent period, etc.).
- Pro tip: Research 2-3 comparable local lease rates before this conversation if you can — landlords respond much better to specific numbers than general pushback.

Difficult Situations & Conflict (Prompts #65–#72)

Prompt #65 — Response: A Guest Is Demanding a Refund You Don't Think Is Warranted

- Use this when: A guest is pushing for a full refund over something minor and you want to hold a fair line without escalating the situation (refund dispute, unreasonable refund request).
- The prompt: You are a restaurant manager responding to a guest who is requesting a full refund for [SITUATION, e.g., a dish they ate most of before complaining]. Write a response that acknowledges their frustration genuinely, explains what we're able to offer instead (partial refund, credit, remake) and why, and stays firm without sounding dismissive or accusatory. Keep it under 100 words and calm throughout.
- Pro tip: Always offer something, even if it's smaller than what they asked for — a guest who feels heard and gets a partial gesture is far less likely to escalate than one who gets a flat no.

Prompt #66 — Script: De-Escalating an Angry Guest In Person

- Use this when: A guest is visibly upset at the table or host stand and a manager needs calm, in-the-moment language to defuse it before it disrupts the room (angry customer, de-escalation script).
- The prompt: You are a hospitality trainer writing de-escalation talking points for managers at [RESTAURANT NAME]. Create a short script for approaching an upset guest whose complaint is about [GENERAL SITUATION, e.g., a long wait or a mistake with their order]. The script should open by lowering the temperature (not defending first), ask one clarifying question, and offer a concrete next step. Keep it to 4 lines of natural spoken language, not corporate phrasing.

- Pro tip: Have the manager physically step slightly to the side or crouch to table height when delivering this — body language does as much de-escalating as the words.

Prompt #67 — Email: Responding to a Reported Health or Cleanliness Concern

- Use this when: A guest raises a serious concern about cleanliness or food handling (not a routine complaint) and you need a careful, honest written response (health concern complaint, cleanliness allegation).
- The prompt: You are the owner of [RESTAURANT NAME] responding to a guest who raised a concern about [SPECIFIC CONCERN, e.g., something they saw in the kitchen or dining room]. Write a serious, respectful response that thanks them for flagging it, confirms we're looking into it directly (without admitting fault or making promises about outcomes), and asks for any additional detail that would help us address it. Keep it under 110 words and avoid sounding defensive.
- Pro tip: For anything involving a real health or safety allegation, loop in ownership and, if it's serious, your insurance provider before sending a final response — get the specifics right before you put anything in writing.

Prompt #68 — Response: A Guest Says They Got Sick After Eating With You

- Use this when: A guest reports getting sick after a visit and you need a careful, empathetic first response while the situation is still being looked into (foodborne illness claim, guest got sick complaint).
- The prompt: You are responding to a guest who reported feeling sick after visiting [RESTAURANT NAME] on [DATE]. Write an empathetic first-response message that takes their report seriously, asks for helpful details (what they ordered, when symptoms started, whether others in their party were affected) to help us investigate, and avoids admitting cause or fault since that hasn't been determined. Keep it under 100 words and sincerely concerned in tone.
- Pro tip: Treat any illness report as something to escalate to ownership and your insurance/legal contact immediately — this prompt is for your first considerate response, not for handling the situation on your own from here.

Prompt #69 — Script: Addressing a Conflict Between Two Staff Members

- Use this when: Tension between two employees is affecting the shift and you need to prepare for a conversation that resolves it instead of picking a side (staff conflict, coworker dispute).
- The prompt: You are a restaurant manager preparing to mediate a conflict between two staff members over [GENERAL ISSUE, e.g., a disagreement about side work or a personality clash]. Write 4-5 talking points for a joint conversation that stays neutral, focuses on the specific behaviors affecting the team rather than character judgments, and ends with both people agreeing to one concrete change. Keep the tone fair and calm, not like a lecture.
- Pro tip: Meet with each person separately first to hear their side before the joint conversation — walking in with context prevents the meeting from turning into two people just repeating themselves at each other.

Prompt #70 — Response: Suspecting a Negative Review Isn't Genuine

- Use this when: A review seems suspicious — from a competitor, someone who never actually visited, or wildly inconsistent with your records — and you need a measured public response while you look into it (fake review, suspicious review, competitor review).
- The prompt: You are responding publicly to a review of [RESTAURANT NAME] that raises questions because [REASON FOR SUSPICION, e.g., we have no record of a reservation or order matching the details]. Write a calm, professional reply that doesn't accuse the reviewer outright, politely notes we couldn't locate a matching visit in our system, and invites them to reach out directly with more details. Keep it under 80 words and avoid sounding defensive or paranoid.
- Pro tip: If you genuinely believe a review is fake, report it directly to the platform (Google, Yelp) using their official process — a calm public reply and a formal report are two separate, both-necessary steps.

Prompt #71 — Response: Handling an Overcharge or Billing Dispute

- Use this when: A guest contacts you saying they were charged incorrectly (double-charged, wrong total, unauthorized tip amount) and you need a clear, reassuring response (billing dispute, overcharge complaint, wrong charge).
- The prompt: You are a manager at [RESTAURANT NAME] responding to a guest who says they were [SPECIFIC BILLING ISSUE, e.g., charged twice for their meal on DATE]. Write a response that apologizes for the inconvenience, confirms the specific next step you're taking to verify and fix it (checking the POS, processing a refund, timeline), and gives a realistic timeframe for resolution. Keep it under 90 words and reassuring.

- Pro tip: Always verify the actual transaction in your POS or payment processor before promising a refund amount — commit to the fix in the message, but confirm the number before you send it.

Prompt #72 — Script: Talking Points for Letting an Employee Go

- Use this when: You need to have a termination conversation and want clear, respectful talking points prepared in advance instead of improvising in the moment (firing an employee, termination conversation).
- The prompt: You are a restaurant manager preparing talking points for letting go of an employee due to [GENERAL REASON, e.g., repeated policy violations after prior warnings]. Write 4-5 talking points that state the decision clearly and early in the conversation (don't bury it), reference the specific documented issues without being harsh, explain next steps (final pay, any paperwork), and end respectfully. Keep the tone direct, calm, and dignified.
- Pro tip: Review your state's requirements for final paycheck timing and any required termination paperwork with an HR advisor or employment attorney before the conversation — the talking points here cover what to say, not the legal requirements around how you say goodbye.

Planning, Strategy & Events (Prompts #73–#80)

Prompt #73 — Plan: Themed Event Night Concept

- Use this when: You want to fill a slow night with a themed event (trivia, wine dinner, live music) and need a full concept, not just a vague idea (themed event night, restaurant event planning).
- The prompt: You are an events planner for [RESTAURANT NAME]. We want to launch a [EVENT TYPE, e.g., trivia night or wine pairing dinner] on our slowest night, [DAY OF WEEK]. Build a concept including a suggested format/schedule for the evening, a simple pricing structure, what we'd need to prep or promote in advance, and one idea to make it feel like a signature event rather than a one-off. Present it as a short outline with headers, not a wall of text.
- Pro tip: Run it as a 4-week trial before committing to it as a permanent weekly fixture — give it time to build word of mouth before judging attendance.

Prompt #74 — Proposal: Catering Quote for a Corporate Client

- Use this when: A local business or organization wants a catering quote for an office event and you need a professional proposal fast (corporate catering proposal, catering quote).
- The prompt: You are the catering manager at [RESTAURANT NAME] preparing a proposal for [CLIENT/COMPANY NAME] for an event of [GUEST COUNT] people on [DATE]. They're interested in [EVENT TYPE, e.g., a lunch buffet]. Build a proposal with 2-3 package options at different price points using items we regularly cater ([LIST A FEW MENU ITEMS]), what's included (setup, disposable ware, delivery), and a note on how far in advance we need final headcount. Present the packages as a table.
- Pro tip: Ask for a shorter "quick quote" version too — many corporate clients just want a single number by email before they'll even look at a full proposal.

Prompt #75 — Plan: Annual Slow-Season vs. Peak-Season Strategy

- Use this when: You want to map out the whole year at a glance so you're not caught off guard by predictable slow and busy stretches (annual planning calendar, seasonal strategy).
- The prompt: You are a restaurant strategy consultant. [RESTAURANT NAME]'s historical pattern is: peak months are [LIST], slow months are [LIST]. Build a simple month-by-month strategic focus for the year — for peak months, note the priority (staffing up, reservation management); for slow months, note the priority (promotions, staff training, maintenance projects). Present it as a 12-row table: Month, Expected Volume, Strategic Focus.
- Pro tip: Revisit and adjust this table every quarter with actual results — the first version is a hypothesis, not a fixed plan.

Prompt #76 — Plan: Feasibility Considerations for a Second Location

- Use this when: You're seriously considering expanding to a second location and want a structured list of what to evaluate before committing (second location, restaurant expansion planning).
- The prompt: You are a restaurant expansion consultant. [RESTAURANT NAME] is considering opening a second location in [POTENTIAL NEW AREA/NEIGHBORHOOD]. Our current location does [APPROXIMATE ANNUAL REVENUE] with [SEATING CAPACITY] seats. Build a checklist of the key factors to evaluate before committing — covering market/demographics, cost, operational capacity (can current management actually run two), and financing — with 2-3 specific questions under each factor.

- Pro tip: Be honest with the AI about your current management bandwidth, not just the market opportunity — most second-location struggles come from operational strain, not a bad market pick.

Prompt #77 — Plan: Cross-Promotion Ideas with Local Businesses

- Use this when: You want to partner with nearby businesses (a brewery, a theater, a gym) for mutual promotion but need concrete ideas instead of a vague "let's collab" (local business partnership, cross-promotion).
- The prompt: You are a local marketing strategist for [RESTAURANT NAME]. We want to build a cross-promotion partnership with [TYPE OF BUSINESS, e.g., a nearby brewery or boutique fitness studio]. Suggest 3 concrete cross-promotion ideas (a joint discount, a bundled event, a referral perk) that would benefit both businesses roughly equally, and a short outreach message I could send to propose the partnership. Keep the outreach message under 100 words.
- Pro tip: Propose partnerships with businesses that share your ideal customer but aren't direct competitors — a yoga studio and a healthy-focused restaurant works; two restaurants on the same block competing for the same table usually doesn't.

Prompt #78 — Plan: Holiday Rush Prep Timeline

- Use this when: A major holiday season (Thanksgiving, Christmas, Valentine's Day) is coming and you want a countdown timeline so nothing gets missed in the crunch (holiday prep timeline, Thanksgiving rush planning).
- The prompt: You are an operations manager building a prep timeline for [RESTAURANT NAME] ahead of [HOLIDAY/BUSY PERIOD], which is [NUMBER] weeks away. Cover the key workstreams: staffing/scheduling, inventory ordering, marketing/reservations, and any special menu prep. Build a week-by-week countdown from now until the holiday, with 2-3 specific action items per week. Present it as a table: Week, Focus Area, Action Items.
- Pro tip: Assign a specific person's name to each row once you finalize it — a timeline with no owner attached to each task tends to quietly slip.

Prompt #79 — Plan: Local Sourcing or Sustainability Initiative

- Use this when: You want to start sourcing more locally or reduce waste and need both a practical plan and messaging to tell guests about it honestly (local sourcing initiative, sustainability messaging).

- The prompt: You are a sustainability consultant for [RESTAURANT NAME]. We want to start [INITIATIVE, e.g., sourcing produce from local farms or reducing single-use packaging]. Suggest 3 realistic first steps to start this without disrupting current operations, and draft one short, honest paragraph we could use on our menu or website describing the initiative — factual and specific, not vague "eco-friendly" language we can't back up.
- Pro tip: Only claim what you can specifically point to (a named local farm, an actual percentage reduction) — vague sustainability claims invite more scrutiny than they're worth.

Prompt #80 — Plan: Annual Strengths/Weaknesses Planning Session Prep

- Use this when: You're heading into a year-end or quarterly planning session with your management team and want a structured discussion guide instead of an unfocused conversation (annual planning meeting, SWOT-style review, management strategy session).
- The prompt: You are a facilitator helping [RESTAURANT NAME] prep for a management planning session. Build a discussion guide with 4 sections: what worked well this year, what didn't work and why, the 2-3 biggest opportunities for next year, and the 2-3 biggest risks to watch. For each section, write 2-3 open-ended discussion questions to prompt real conversation rather than yes/no answers.
- Pro tip: Send the discussion guide to your managers a few days ahead of the meeting — people give sharper, more honest answers when they've had time to think instead of being put on the spot.

Bonus: Power Prompts (Prompts #81–#90)

These are longer, multi-step prompts that chain several tasks together into one output. They take a little more setup but replace what would otherwise be an hour of separate work — this is where the real time savings live.

Prompt #81 — Power Prompt: Turn One Seasonal Ingredient Into a Month of Content

- Use this when: You have one great seasonal ingredient or dish and want an entire month of social content built around it in one go instead of brainstorming post by post (monthly content calendar, seasonal ingredient content plan).
- The prompt: You are a social media strategist for [RESTAURANT NAME]. We're featuring [SEASONAL INGREDIENT OR DISH] throughout [MONTH]. Do this in steps: (1) suggest 4 different dishes or drink specials we could build around it across the month, (2) for each, write a short Instagram caption, (3) organize all 4 into a posting calendar noting which week to post each one and why that timing makes sense (building anticipation, mid-month reminder, last-chance urgency), and (4) suggest one piece of "behind the scenes" content to post between the dish announcements. Present the final calendar as a table.

- Pro tip: Batch your photography for all 4 dishes in one session at the start of the month — this prompt gives you the words, but you'll still need the visuals ready to match the calendar.

Prompt #82 — Power Prompt: Build a Complete New-Hire Onboarding Packet

- Use this when: You've just hired someone and want the whole onboarding experience — welcome message, first-week plan, and handbook excerpt — built together so it's consistent, not assembled from scattered documents (new hire packet, onboarding bundle).
- The prompt: You are building a complete onboarding packet for a new [ROLE] at [RESTAURANT NAME]. Do this in steps: (1) write a warm welcome message confirming their start date of [DATE] and what to bring, (2) build a simple day-by-day plan for their first week covering what they should learn or shadow each day, (3) write a short "who's who" section introducing key people they'll work with by role, and (4) list 3 questions they should feel free to ask during week one so they don't feel awkward asking. Format it as one clean document with headers for each section.
- Pro tip: Reuse this exact prompt for every new hire in the same role — swap only the name and date, and you'll have a consistent onboarding experience without rebuilding it each time.

Prompt #83 — Power Prompt: Launch a Limited-Time Offer Across Every Channel

- Use this when: You've decided on a new limited-time dish or promotion and need everything needed to launch it — description, social posts, email, and staff talking points — built together so the messaging matches everywhere (LTO campaign, full promotion rollout).
- The prompt: You are launching a limited-time offer at [RESTAURANT NAME]: [DISH/PROMOTION DETAILS], available [DATE RANGE]. Do this in steps: (1) write a menu description (15-25 words), (2) write an Instagram caption and a Facebook post announcing it, (3) write a one-line staff talking point servers can use to recommend it at the table, and (4) write a short "last chance" follow-up post to run in the final few days of the promotion. Keep the tone consistent across all four and label each piece clearly.
- Pro tip: Schedule the "last chance" post before you get busy — it's the piece that gets forgotten most often, and it's usually the highest-converting one.

Prompt #84 — Power Prompt: Build a Full Negative-Review Recovery Plan

- Use this when: A bad review points to a real, recurring problem and you want to handle the public response, the internal fix, and the guest follow-up all at once instead of just replying and moving on (review recovery system, fixing the root cause of a complaint).
- The prompt: You are a restaurant reputation and operations consultant for [RESTAURANT NAME]. Here's a recent negative review: "[PASTE REVIEW TEXT]." Do this in steps: (1) write a public reply following our usual tone of [TONE], (2) identify the likely root operational cause behind the complaint (not just the symptom), (3) suggest one concrete, low-cost fix we could implement this week, and (4) draft a short private follow-up message we could send the guest once the fix is in place, inviting them back. Label each of the four parts clearly.
- Pro tip: Actually follow through on step 3 before you send step 4 — inviting a guest back to see "we fixed it" only works if something really changed.

Prompt #85 — Power Prompt: Plan and Announce a Menu Price Increase End-to-End

- Use this when: You've decided prices need to go up and want the pricing math, the staff briefing, and the guest-facing message all handled consistently in one pass (price increase rollout, raising menu prices).
- The prompt: You are helping [RESTAURANT NAME] roll out a menu price increase. Our food and labor costs have risen by [PERCENTAGE/AMOUNT], and we're increasing prices on [ITEMS OR "across the board"] by [AMOUNT/PERCENTAGE], effective [DATE]. Do this in steps: (1) suggest how to round the new prices so they feel intentional, not arbitrary, (2) write a short internal note to staff explaining the change so they can speak to it confidently, (3) write a brief, confident social post for guests, and (4) write one talking point servers can use if a regular guest comments on the new price. Label each part clearly.
- Pro tip: Time the staff note to go out at least 3 days before the guest-facing post — your team should never learn about a price change from a customer before they hear it from you.

Prompt #86 — Power Prompt: Build a Two-Week Grand Opening Campaign

- Use this when: You're opening a new restaurant or location and need a full two-week campaign — press outreach, social calendar, and email — built together instead of piecing it together channel by channel (grand opening campaign, opening week marketing plan).
- The prompt: You are building a two-week grand opening campaign for [RESTAURANT NAME], opening [DATE] at [LOCATION]. Our concept is [BRIEF CONCEPT DESCRIPTION]. Do this in steps: (1) write a short local press release opener pitching the opening to local media, (2) build a 2-week social content calendar with one post idea and caption per key day (announcement, countdown, opening day, first-week highlight), (3) write a launch email for our list offering [OPENING OFFER IF ANY], and (4) suggest 2 local businesses or influencers worth personally inviting to opening week. Present the social calendar as a table.

- Pro tip: Send the press release at least 2 weeks before opening — local media and bloggers need lead time to plan a feature, not a same-week pitch.

Prompt #87 — Power Prompt: Build a Full Holiday Catering Sales Push

- Use this when: Holiday catering season is approaching and you want the outreach email, social promotion, and follow-up sequence built together to actually convert inquiries into booked orders (holiday catering campaign, catering sales push).
- The prompt: You are building a holiday catering sales campaign for [RESTAURANT NAME] ahead of [HOLIDAY, e.g., Thanksgiving]. Our catering menu includes [LIST 2-3 POPULAR CATERING ITEMS]. Do this in steps: (1) write an email to past catering customers announcing holiday catering availability with an order-by deadline of [DATE], (2) write a social post promoting the same, (3) write a short reply template for when someone inquires, asking the key details you need (headcount, date, dietary needs), and (4) write a one-line reminder message to send to anyone who inquired but hasn't confirmed, one week before the order deadline. Label each part clearly.
- Pro tip: Set your order-by deadline earlier than you think you need to — holiday week always brings a wave of last-minute requests you can't fulfill if your kitchen is already maxed out.

Prompt #88 — Power Prompt: Build a Staff Culture and Retention Action Plan

- Use this when: Turnover has been high and you want a real plan — not just a vague "improve culture" goal — built from a quick pulse-check through to a concrete action plan (staff retention plan, improving team culture).
- The prompt: You are a restaurant culture consultant for [RESTAURANT NAME]. We've had higher-than-normal turnover recently, particularly among [ROLE/SHIFT IF KNOWN]. Do this in steps: (1) write 5 short, anonymous pulse-check questions we could ask staff to understand what's driving it, (2) suggest 3 likely root causes based on common reasons restaurant staff leave, (3) for each likely cause, suggest one realistic, low-cost action we could take, and (4) write a short message to the team introducing the pulse-check so it doesn't feel like a trap. Label each part clearly.

- Pro tip: Actually share a summary of what you heard and what you're changing back with the team afterward — a survey that visibly goes nowhere does more damage to trust than not asking at all.

Prompt #89 — Power Prompt: Build a Complete Private Event Sales Funnel

- Use this when: You want every touchpoint of a private event inquiry — first reply, proposal, follow-up, and post-event thank you — written together so nothing falls through the cracks between steps (private event funnel, full event booking sequence).
- The prompt: You are building the full private event communication sequence for [RESTAURANT NAME]. Do this in steps: (1) write a first-reply email to a new private event inquiry that asks the key qualifying questions (date, headcount, budget, occasion), (2) write a short proposal template with 2 package tiers based on our typical private event minimums of [MINIMUM SPEND/GUEST COUNT], (3) write a gentle follow-up email for if they go quiet for a week after receiving the proposal, and (4) write a post-event thank-you email that also asks for a review. Label each part clearly and keep the tone warm and professional throughout.
- Pro tip: Set a calendar reminder to actually send step 3 exactly one week after every proposal — most lost private events aren't lost to a "no," they're lost to nobody following up.

Prompt #90 — Power Prompt: Build a Competitor Positioning and Marketing Angle

- Use this when: You want to understand how you stack up against nearby competitors and turn that into a clear marketing angle, not just a list of what other restaurants offer (competitive analysis, finding your restaurant's marketing angle).
- The prompt: You are a restaurant positioning strategist. [RESTAURANT NAME] competes with [LIST 2-3 NEARBY COMPETITORS AND WHAT THEY'RE KNOWN FOR]. Our strengths are [YOUR STRENGTHS, e.g., made-from-scratch everything, a specific chef background, a unique setting]. Do this in steps: (1) build a simple comparison table of price point, cuisine style, and standout feature for us versus each competitor, (2) identify one gap none of them are filling that we credibly could, (3) turn that gap into a one-sentence positioning statement for us, and (4) suggest 2 marketing angles (a tagline direction and a content theme) built on that positioning.
- Pro tip: Be honest about competitor strengths instead of only listing their weaknesses — a positioning strategy built on wishful thinking about the competition falls apart the first time a guest compares you directly.

Prompt-Writing Cheat Sheet: Write Your Own in 5 Minutes

Every prompt in this pack follows the same simple framework. Once you know it, you can write a great prompt for any situation this pack doesn't cover — a new one comes up in this business every week.

Role → Task → Context → Format → Constraints

Role: Tell the AI who it's acting as. This sets the vocabulary and judgment it uses. "You are a restaurant manager" gets a very different answer than "you are a marketing expert" — be specific about the role that fits your task.

Task: State exactly what you want, as a single clear action. Not "help with my menu" but "write a 20-word description for this dish." Vague tasks get vague, generic answers.

Context: Give the AI the specific details only you know — your restaurant name, cuisine, tone, price point, the actual situation. This is the difference between a generic result and one that sounds like it was written for your restaurant specifically. This is the step people skip most, and it's the one that matters most.

Format: Say exactly how you want the output structured — an email, a table, a numbered checklist, three short variations. If you don't specify, you'll often get a longer, more generic answer than you needed.

Constraints: Set the boundaries — word count, tone, what to avoid, what to definitely include. This is what keeps the output usable without heavy editing.

Example 1 — A guest complaint response:

"You are a restaurant manager [Role]. Write a reply to a guest who complained their steak arrived overcooked [Task]. We're an upscale steakhouse and this guest has dined with us before [Context]. Write it as a short email [Format]. Keep it under 90 words, sincere but not overly apologetic, and offer them a complimentary dessert on their next visit [Constraints]."

Example 2 — A social media caption:

"You are the social media manager for a casual Italian restaurant [Role]. Write an Instagram caption announcing our new truffle mushroom ravioli [Task]. The dish is house-made pasta with wild mushrooms and shaved truffle, and our tone is warm and a little playful [Context]. Write it as a caption with 5 hashtags suggested separately [Format]. Keep it under 50 words and don't use the word "delicious" [Constraints]."

Notice both examples hit all five parts in just 2-3 sentences. That's really all a great prompt needs — you don't need to overthink it, you just need to not skip a piece.
